Western Irrigation Benefits Would Be Given All 48 States

The federal government makes ans to build water facilities - but in the 17 Western states comly considered to be arid. But with recurring drouths in the Middle West and South, and the steady fall in water level of artesian wells, a bill is before the congress to make all 48 states eligible for loans.

Arkansas' junior senator, J. W. Fulbright, is backing the new measure, and testified, along with State Senator Marvin W. Melton. jefore the Senate Agriculture of Inittee in Washington Wednes-

The bill would authorize loans up to $250,000 to either individuals or corporations, the latter being restricted to $100,000 under the old law. And of course these benefits would apply to citizens in all states - not merely the 17 Western deser commonwealths.

In his testimony Wednesda enator Fulbright said:

We pay so much attention to lood control, but the greatest problem is drouth." And Mr. Melton added that while Arkansas has an annual rainfall of 48 inches much of it is lost because there are no adequate means of conserving it. Whether to control floods or avert

Sunday School Lesson

By William E. Gilroy, D. D. When for some years during the summers our home was visited by my nephews and nieces I would read the Bible daily at family worship. The children would say "Read the Old Testament, uncle."

I suppose that the distinctive and beautiful stories of the New Testament were already very familiar to them, but I have often wondered why they so much emphasized that perferences for the Old.

Certainly, much in the Old Testament cannot be considered appropriate for children - the records of evil kings, the stories of violence and wars, the flagrant immoralities of individuals and the adultry of King David.

The Old Testament would not be an honest record if it did not 9:30 a.m. Ladies Bible Study reflect the times out of which it came. Nor would it be so profound a book about men if it ignored the evil in him and dealt FIRST PENTECOSTAL CHURCH only with his quest of righteousness and his achievements of faith and glodness.

What is dominant in the Old though children Testament, would hardly sense this, is the triumph of good over evil, the passion to be and to do right, the noble and courageous aspiration of those who cried:

"Search me, O God, and known my heart ; try me and know my 7:30 p. m. Prayer Meeting and thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me and lead me in the way everlasting" (Psalms 139:23, 24).

That is something far re moved from the evil of kings, and about which I have been reading prophets he falsies of false in I Kings.

I imagine one of the stories in which the children delighted was goodness and courage the heroic defender of all that he believed Grady to be right, even when he thought that he was standing alone.

I think, perhaps,  $\overline{I}$  should have tried to impress upon the children the fact that Elijah was mistaken about his standing alone There were seven thousand like him. We never stand alone when we stand for the right.

What a treasure house ries the Old Testament has, as these children had found out! Is it any wonder that they found such intense interest in the dramatic story of Cain and Abel?

Is it any wonder they delighted in Abraham's pioneer travel and his magnanimous dealings with Lot; in the story of Joesph, with its tense scenes and its amazing contrasts and the indomitable character of a man true alike in the depth of adversity as in the height of power?

The story of Moses and the Promised Land the story of Samuel in the temple; those of the great patriots' Ezra and Nehemiah all these the children found delight. How wonderful it would be to be young again, with a bunch of youngsters around me, to tell if all again! I wonder how many of you who tech in Sunday schools realize what a privilege is yours,
